wholesale basis or two years ago?

At first the answer would seem "of course." But it is not as simple as that. That winter drained the fiscal reserves of the state-- and many emotions in and out of Utah, as the news spread over the country. Donations for this state's deer and elk poured in from as far as the East Coast.

Movie stars contributed, even the Oval Office. But the Utah Div. of Wildlife Resources roads, parking lots, et al. Deer which wander down into the old stomping grounds find people chasing them away from fitzers or dogs, cars, and concrete. They don't have to be hit by a car (although many are near hay stacks), nor chewed by a dog to succumb. All they need, when a low fat reserve ebb, is to use up that precious energy running to safety.

Then, with less fat reserves, starvation is hastened. What can
